

Elder Law

Long-Term Planning

Throughout life, people will try to do all that they can to provide for and protect the ones they love. However, because the estate administration process can be complicated by outdated estate planning, tax obligations, and the laws governing probate administration, having Indiana attorney Barbara J. Baird at your side during these cases can go a long way toward making estate planning a seamless process. Indiana Elder Law Attorney Baird has devoted herself to making the estate planning process easier for families in need of confronting inevitable life transitions, working with families to demystify and simplify an often complex process.

Indianapolis Elder Law Attorney Barbara J. Baird has been helping individuals and families in Indiana successfully manage the financial and legal aspects of planning for the future. Attorney Baird develops unique, personalized plans for clients and their families as loved ones go through the aging process. She helps you explore the best use and management of personal and financial resources to meet any and all long term objectives, focusing on the priority of home-based care options when appropriate and making things emotionally and financially easier in the event placement in a facility is required. Attorney Baird knows that this can be a hard time for your family, and she offers compassionate, experienced counsel as to how to make this transition as seamless as possible.

Works With Families

As our nation grows older, elder law has emerged as a unique area of focus. As an elder care lawyer, Attorney Baird focuses on the needs of the elderly, and offers a variety of services to handle their particular needs related to planning for the future, including estate planning, special needs trusts, coordinating public benefits, and planning for incapacity. She works side by side with you to make sure that the estate planning process is stress-free and efficient: she knows that having your affairs in order makes the experience of preparing for transition a great deal easier.

In addition to offering a wide variety of estate planning services, Attorney Baird also works with clients to handle their legal needs in relation to wills and trusts, business law, adoption, and tax issues.
